Have you recently undergone facial surgery?

Has your doctor instructed you not to put any pressure on your face or ear while you sleep?

After years of sleeping on your side, training yourself to sleep on your back can be a HUGE challenge!

Even if you manage to do so, there's always the fear of switching to a side position during sleep.

If you don't take care of the extra sensitive skin after the surgery, you may expose it to infections or delay the healing process.

What if we tell you that you can continue to sleep on your side without compromising your surgical results, comfort, or the healing process?

Don't worry. The solution is surgeon-approved!

HOW TO USE THE SLEEPEZE SURGICAL RECOVERY PILLOW

The Surgical Recovery Pillow comes with bolsters on both sides to allow you to line up your face with the hollow contours when lying on the right or left side. Your face will glide onto each side as you roll from right to left.

The space between the contours will keep you comfortable when you lay on your back.

you're instructed to keep your head elevated after surgery, you can place the Surgical Recovery Pillow on top of your existing pillow. After recovery, it's best to use the surgical pillow alone for proper neck alignment. You can also continue to use it as an anti-wrinkle pillow.
